

Episode 5 - How The Mighty Have Fallen

Tension at Timbira

After voting out Sydney at a tense Tribal Council, the fractured Timbira tribe returns to camp. "Sydney got voted off, thank God," Carolina brags. "You know, my plan worked and I can't believe I pulled that one off." "That was a bit of a curveball," Joe announces to his tribe as he sets his torch down. "Earlier today, I threw the, uh, Immunity Challenge to protect J.T., and I lost Syd, so it's a hard thing to swallow right now," Joe admits. "I was pretty dang shocked. I mean, it's not fun to see anybody go home, and especially someone that you worked hard on building an alliance with, so I definitely have some regrets about throwing the challenge. I wish I could change what happened, but whatever. Too late now..."

"Tension has been growing the last few days," Debbie observes. "I think we're all very stressed out at this point. The mood around camp, it's awkward. You know, Joe had been giving me this burning stare since we got back and it's like, I'm not gonna have a confrontation." As Jerry tends to the fire, Joe confronts Debbie in front of the tribe for betraying Sydney. "I trusted you," he says. Debbie argues that there are no rules in the game: "We're all doing the best we can given the circumstances," she defends. "I have a family to take care of..." Not interested in hearing excuses for Debbie's vote, Joe lashes back: "We've all made sacrifices!" "I can tell you're really upset, but I'm not gonna get into it with you," Debbie insists.

Joe continues to hound Debbie for her decision. "How can you sit there and be mad when we're playing a game?!" Debbie retaliates. "If I want to be mad, just let me be mad," Joe tells her. "Have fun explaining it to your kids why it's okay for you to lie and backstab people! Next time a kid lies to you at school because you set that example..." "Okay! It's over!" Debbie exclaims. "Why do you keep bringing it up?!" Joe mumbles something, as Jerry intervenes on Debbie's behalf and says that people shouldn't be judged for the decisions they make in the game. "I just hope we can come to some peace tonight," an emotional Debbie sobs. "I think we can put it behind us," Joe half-heartedly replies.

"Debbie's a liar. I'm not gonna argue with her, but uh, if we have to go back to Tribal Council, I know my vote," Joe tells the camera. As her tribemates uncomfortably stand around the fire, Debbie says "Let's try to feel together as a tribe because when one of us is down, the rest of us are down." Spencer agrees that he doesn't want the tribe to be fractured. "And I don't care that she's a principal," Joe continues in his confessional. "If I can't trust you, you have to be voted off, and she's proven to me that I can't trust her. Bottom line."

The Next To Go

As the morning sun illuminates the Jalapao camp, the tribe members take bets on who they think were voted off at Timbira's Tribal Council. "We won our Immunity Challenge yesterday, so Timbira, you know, had Tribal Council last night, and I think Erinn or Carolina went home," Sandy says in her confessional. "That's who I say," Coach reiterates. "Carolina or Erinn, and if it's not, then ooh boy, they're manipulating everybody." "Dude, I tell ya, they're the two most manipulative players here," Coach then says. "I had them figured out on Day One, by the way," he gleefully proclaims, before Taj says she hopes Jerry wasn't voted off. J.T. agrees that the original Jalapao members would probably stay together.

Later that morning, J.T. privately asks Tyson what would have happened if Jalapao went to Tribal Council instead. "Do you really wanna know the answer to that?" Tyson responds. J.T. nods his head, as Tyson tells him "I think you're a lot bigger threat than Sandy would be." "Oh, I understand," J.T. replies. "It's just a numbers thing, and that's all I'm saying right now," Tyson says. Disappointed to learn that he's on the chopping block, J.T. says "Appreciate you tellin' me." Later, J.T. explains his thoughts to the camera: "Tyson just told me right straight to my face that it'd have been me if we'd have lost so Sandy probably done thrown me under the bus, you know? Up until this swap, I feel like things were goin' my way, so it's definitely scary right now. You know, this is a game for a million dollars. I'm damn sure not gonna be the fifth one out," an uneasy J.T. laughs. "I'm playin' this thing to win."

Jerry The Chef

On Day Thirteen, Joe and Spencer take an early morning walk to discuss their position in the game. Both men agree that Debbie has to go and that they will stick together and not betray each other. Spencer then formulates a plan that he and Joe form a new alliance with Carolina and Erinn in order to get to the merge. Reflecting on the turn of events at the last Tribal Council, Joe says: "This game, man, the power can change in the blink of an eye, so I'm very nervous now. I feel like I stand a good shot, you know, of going home. Fortunately I still have Spencer and he's gonna stay loyal to me, so, uh, if we can get Carolina and Erinn on our side, then we can talk." "It's gonna be a long three days, man," Joe remarks to his ally.

As the pressure of the game takes its toll on the Timbira tribe, so does the relentlessly harsh environment of the Brazilian Highlands. With the 130-degree heat sapping them of their energy, the castaways rested around camp. One castaway, Jerry, has already dealt with similar conditions during his tour in Afghanistan: "It's pretty much the same thing as Afghanistan-type weather," he explains. "Hot, dry. You know, that prepared me a lot for coming here. I've been in the Reserves for like 26 years now, so I'm adapting to this environment pretty well." As he prepares a meal of rice and beans for his tribe, Jerry tells a story about his time in Afghanistan. In confessional, he discusses the tribe's food situation compared to the military: "The only difference is in Afghanistan, we had people cook our food and bring it to us," Jerry laughs. "Out here, we gotta find our own food, cook our own food, so...I figured we'd try it a different way today." As Jerry cooks the rice and beans together in one pot, his tribemates keep a close watch. "I'm just wondering, like, I never stir it that much when I make rice at home," Carolina annoyingly says. When the pot is finished cooking, Jerry's tribemates agree with Debbie that "they're not very good." The rice is soggy and the beans are undercooked, but Jerry enjoys them nonetheless. "Everybody else in the tribe, uh, wasn't too excited about it; they thought it wasn't very good," Jerry tells the camera, "So I finished the rest of the pot myself. It didn't bother me one bit." "Mmm, mmm, tastes real good!" Jerry heartily laughs, as he finishes the last scoop of rice and beans.

Reward Challenge - Dizziness As Usual

Survivor: Tocantins Fanfic

Jalapao and Timbira arrive on their respective colored mats, as host Jeff Probst reveals that Timbira voted Sydney out at the last Tribal Council. The Jalapao members are visibly shocked at the news, although Coach's face also shows anger and disappointment. "I'm shocked that Carolina and Erinn are both still in this game," he tells the camera, "And the fact that they're both still here just shows that they're pulling off some sneaky stuff. You know, the first chance I get if we're both still here in the merge, Carolina's out of here." Tyson shakes his head, as Coach whispers "I'm so pissed off, man."

Jeff Probst then explains the rules of the challenge. Each round, one tribe member will be seated on a spinning platform. Another tribe member will race while pulling a rope attached to that platform causing the seated tribe member to get dizzy. The dizzy tribe member must then run across a balance beam to the finish line. One point will be awarded to the winning tribe in each round. The first tribe to score three points wins a trip to the Charmin Café, where they will enjoy coffee, pastries, and a modern toilet with plenty of Charmin.

For the first round, J.T. pulls Taj and Joe pulls Spencer. J.T. and Joe send Taj and Spencer whirling around as they dash toward the finish line. Spencer scores the first point for Timbira by defeating Taj, who stumbles off the balance beam several times and falls onto the ground from her dizziness. In the next round, Coach pulls Candace and Jerry pulls Erinn. After both runners cross the finish line, Candace and Erinn run across the balance beam. The women get off to a quick start. Erinn then slips off, causing her to have to return to the beginning of the beam, which allows Candace to score a point for Jalapao. In the third round, J.T. spins Tyson and Joe spins Carolina. Carolina spins completely out of control and thus has a difficult time regaining her balance when she has to make her way across the balance beam. Tyson scores another point for Jalapao. For the next round, Coach pulls Sandy as Jerry pulls Debbie. At the balance beam, Debbie makes quick work after restarting once and scores the second point for Timbira, tying it up. In the final round, J.T. pulls Tyson and Joe pulls Spencer. Feeling the pressure to deliver a victory, Tyson races across Jalapao's balance beam and stumbles off near the end. Spencer takes a calmer approach to the challenge and pulls through for Timbira, scoring the third and final point for his tribe.

A disappointed Jalapao grumbles as Timbira wins the Charmin Café reward and Tyson reluctantly apologizes for the loss. "Jalapao lost the Reward Challenge today," J.T. narrates. "We definitely need to get ourselves together for the Immunity Challenge or else I'm goin' home," he says.

The Work Horse

After losing the Reward Challenge, the Jalapao members disappointedly return to their camp. "We just got home from our Reward Challenge, and I'm pissed off because I think we could have done a lot better, or I could have done better," Taj tells the camera, "So...I just wanna get my mind off the loss. I mean, we're already bored to death out of our minds anyway," she laughs, "So we decided to make up a, uh, deck of cards so we'll at least have something to do." As Taj, Sandy, Candace, and Tyson paint numbers on leaves, J.T. breaks off from the group and begins to collect firewood.

"I'm definitely disappointed to lose the challenge," J.T. admits. "The Reward would've been huge right now for Jalapao, but as long as I don't think about it, I'll be alright." While the rest of Jalapao plays cards in the shelter, J.T. works tirelessly to complete as many tasks as he can around camp. He then explains his strategy to the camera: "My strategy right now's to work my tail off," he good-naturedly laughs. "I'm hopin' that if I keep workin' hard everybody'll keep me around over Sandy, and it's gotten me this far; I know I got a long way to go in this game."

Observing J.T.'s work ethic from the shelter, Tyson comments: "J.T.'s a pretty hard worker around camp. I mean, I'll work when I need to, but I'm too pretty to be doing all this hard physical labor like he does. Hauling wood and, you know, chopping trees? I might wear out my most valuable possession. You know, I'll pull my weight in the challenges and probably, uh, dominate, like I always do," he smirks in confessional. As Taj deals another game of cards, she notes that "[J.T.] works so hard. I mean, he's great at keeping fire going..." "He's chopping more wood right now, I think," Tyson adds as he looks around for J.T. "I just wish he'd take a break," Taj says.

"I think J.T.'s a likable dude but I'm not about to fall in love with him," Tyson candidly tells the camera. "You know, I didn't come out here to give a million dollars to the most deserving person or the most hardest working; I came out here for me to win a million dollars for myself. I mean, yeah, he's charming; he's funny; um, he's good in challenges, but...I mean, I may not have a southern accent, but I'm pretty much all of those things too, so he can work himself out of the tribe for all I care."

The Charmin Café

The Timbira tribe arrives at the Charmin Café and discovers a grass hut with a picnic table full of coffee, juice, pastries, and an outdoor bathroom full of Charmin toilet paper. They are just as excited to see the multitude of spa items, courtesy of Herbal Essences: shampoo, conditioner, toothbrushes, and combs. Narrating the experience, as the tribe gorges on the great abundance of food, Erinn says, "It's just great to be out of camp for a while. It's good to be in a place where you have soap; you have shampoo; you have toothbrushes. You know, having that stuff after 13 days of living in dirt and ash and rain is pretty exciting." Accustomed to showering in locker rooms, Spencer lathers himself up in front of his tribe and explains the joy he felt in being able to get clean and enjoy some of the comforts of civilization.

Later on, as the tribe relaxes in the hut, Erinn discovers another wonderful surprise: letters from home. The Timbira members burst into tears as they read correspondence from friends and relatives. In her confessional, a teary-eyed Debbie describes the sacrifices she made to play Survivor: "I walked out of a middle school with 908 kids, 75 staff members, my family. I've got two children of my own, three stepchildren, my husband, my parents, so you know, just hearing something from home was amazing." "I've sacrificed a ton to be here," Debbie tells the camera, "And that's why it's so important that I don't go home until the game is over."

"I've become very close with the people, uh, in my tribe, but I definitely missed hearing from my family and getting the news from home. You know, I like my morning newspaper," Jerry laughs. "That's definitely what I missed, you know, Survivor: Tocantins Fanfic" more than anything else.” The other Timbira tribe members cry as they talk about their families. “It’s good to see everybody become human,” Joe reflects, as he reads his letter. “Uh, even Debbie. You know, I don’t think she’s a bad person at all. It’s just tough to have the script flipped on you, but the bottom line is no matter how human you are, you have to vote these people home.”

Wrapped in plush towels and silk bathrobes, the Timbira members agree to put aside their differences and fight hard at the upcoming Immunity Challenge: “I really don’t know what it’s gonna take for us to win this next challenge, but I think this bonding experience definitely is gonna help,” Erinn offers, enjoying the serenity of the Reward. “I just want us to win,” a refreshed Spencer says. “Oh, we have to win,” Joe corrects him. “I mean, we all know how important this is.” “I think this tribe can definitely get over, you know, this Joe-Debbie conflict,” Spencer tells the camera. “We’re gonna do our best to focus as hard as we can, so hopefully this win today will, um, help smooth things over before the next challenge.”

The Strongest Survive

At the Jalapao camp, J.T. and Coach make the hike to retrieve treemail. Still feeling vulnerable, J.T. explains the dynamics in his newly swapped Jalapao tribe, saying, “I pretty much had everything under control at the old Jalapao tribe and now I’m pretty much in the minority over here – four against two.” Despite the uneven numbers, J.T. does not want to go down without a fight, and reveals his next strategic move. “I need to form some kind of agreement or alliance, and I think Coach seems like he’d most likely be on my side.” J.T. has earned Coach’s respect and admiration due to his strong work ethic and challenge performances: “J.T.’s strong; he’s a warrior,” Coach tells the camera. “He’s proven himself over somebody like, let’s say Sandy who really hasn’t done much at camp or in the challenges, so I mean, I’m gonna stay loyal to this Timbira alliance, but my strategy from the beginning of this game has been to surround myself with the strongest, and that means keeping J.T.”

“If we lost today, I was probably gonna vote Tyson,” J.T. admits. Taken aback by J.T.’s target, Coach matter-of-factly states “Okay; I can’t vote Tyson.” J.T. then asks him who he’d be willing to vote for. “Well, I mean, who’s the weakest?” Coach ponders. “Is it Sandy? Is it Taj? You know, or is it even Candace?” “Sandy’s probably the weakest, in my opinion,” J.T. says. He then tells Coach that he thinks Candace is the strongest woman in challenges. “Let me tell you something: a couple of days ago, she wanted to quit,” Coach reveals to a surprised J.T. “I’m not kidding ya. She was ready to walk from the game and I said ‘This is not the person I thought I was dealing with,’ but I mean, I don’t know yet who I’d vote for, but I can’t vote you over Sandy.” J.T. can hardly hide the grin from his face as he contemplates the change in his fate: “I just talked to Coach and he seemed like he might be open to workin’ with me, and you know, keepin’ me in this game, but I’m not gonna put all my eggs in, uh, Coach’s basket; that’s only one vote, so I still gotta win this next Immunity Challenge.”

Immunity Challenge - Water Mortar

The two tribes, Jalapao and Timbira, arrive on their tribe-colored mats. Host Jeff Probst then explains the rules of the challenge. Two members of each tribe will alternate launching balls out onto the water-logged course where the remaining tribe members catch the ball. It does not matter what color the ball is: points can be scored by catching a ball from either tribe. The first tribe to score five points wins immunity. The launchers for Jalapao are Sandy and Candace and for Timbira, Erinn and Debbie. Guarding each other and attempting to catch are Carolina and Taj, Coach and Spencer, Joe and Tyson, and Jerry and J.T.

Survivor: Tocantins Fanfic

"I'm definitely, uh, looking forward to another full contact challenge," Tyson admits with a smug grin on his face. "I think it'll be fun to beat up the other team." Meanwhile, Joe is also looking forward to the challenge and willing to get physical if need be: "You know, I play fair; I play by the rules," he says, "But if I have to get rough today, I guess I have to. There's never been a challenge more important than this one."

J.T. rapidly scores the first point for Jalapao. Joe misses Tyson knocks his arm out of the way with his net, causing Joe to push him back afterwards. In the next round, Taj snags another point for Jalapao after throwing Carolina off of her. Spencer then scores a point for Timbira, after outmaneuvering Coach and diving for the ball. The action intensifies as both tribes scurry throughout the course to catch the balls. Joe catches the next ball for Timbira, tying the game two to two. With the score tied, Joe and Tyson become extremely physical in the next round, doing whatever it takes to retrieve the balls. Carolina and Taj begin to push each other. This time, Carolina catches the ball and scores for Timbira, much to Taj's frustration. When the next balls are launched, aggression continues to boil over as Joe forcefully body-checks Tyson. In spite of this, Tyson catches the ball and ties up the game for Jalapao. Angrily, Joe pushes Tyson again, causing Tyson to retaliate and tell Joe to "Get your hands off me, dude!" Carolina grabs Taj around the neck, as Jeff Probst calls another foul and Taj pushes her down into the water. In another physical battle, both Jerry and Spencer race for the ball due to a lack of communication on Timbira. Joe shouts to Debbie to launch the balls towards him, but Debbie sends the ball flying high down the course. J.T. then scores the next point for Jalapao, putting them in the lead at four to three. Spencer just misses the next ball for Timbira and Joe once again lunges at Tyson, who scores the winning point for Jalapao. A frustrated Joe slams his fist into the water as Immunity is awarded to the Jalapao tribe for the second time in a row.

Showdown

As reality begins to set in for Timbira that another tribe member has to be eliminated, Debbie quickly confirms the vote for Joe with Erinn, Carolina, and Jerry. "That comment he said about me being a principal, I mean, that crossed a line with me and I think that you guys probably feel the same," Debbie suggests. "Yeah," Erinn agrees. "It's like, you don't go there." Looking for reassurance of their alliance, Debbie reminds the original Timbira members of her loyalty: "I swear I'm with you guys," she insists, "And I mean, I will fight for you in this game." "We need to take [Joe] out," she urges. Agreeing that Joe will without a doubt be the next to go, Erinn says "He's out." With the former Timbira members on her side, Debbie ponders the upcoming Tribal Council: "With my vote against Sydney, I knew it was either going to kill me or help me in this game, and so far, I think it's helped me," she tells the camera. "I mean, Erinn and Carolina and Jerry, they're telling me that they're all voting for Joe, but we'll see tonight at Tribal Council if everybody's telling me the truth or not."

Meanwhile, in the shallow river waters, Spencer is also contemplating the vote: "Losing Sydney at the last Tribal Council was very frustrating because she was a part of my alliance," Spencer reveals in his confessional. "It's like, if I lose Joe tonight, that's another person gone from my alliance, another number gone, and then I'm probably next on the chopping block, so it's scary, for sure, to think that I could lose my alliance at back-to-back Tribal Councils, so I feel like I'm fighting, for Joe to stay."

When Carolina and Erinn join Spencer in the water, he begins to scramble to save his ally: "I know / like you [both]," he begins. "I would form an alliance with you after the merge, if there's any way that you guys would vote for Debbie." Spencer then continues his pitch: "Think about it. Our only hope of going into the merge with even numbers is to win the next Immunity Challenge and I think we're gonna have a lot better chance with Joe around than Debbie," he explains. "Well, I mean, Jerry or Debbie..." Carolina and Erinn both tell Spencer that they don't want to vote out Jerry because they don't see him as a devious player that they would have to worry about later on. Erinn also admits that she's grown to like Jerry. "The one kindof hesitation I have with voting out Debbie is that the original Jalapao tribe would definitely be down to four members, um, if Debbie goes home, but I mean, if there's no chance whatsoever of it being Jerry, I'd rather it be Debbie than Joe," Spencer says.

Listening closely to Spencer's recommendation to vote out Debbie, Erinn carefully weighs the decision: "Now we have options," she tells the camera. "Our backs aren't against the wall. It's crazy how that happened; you know, we've now gone from the first two potentially out of the game to the two who really are calling the shots. We could vote for Joe or Debbie no problem." Joe then joins his tribemates to cool down in the water and aggressively tries to persuade Carolina and Erinn to vote out Debbie: "If she voted out Syd, I guarantee she'd vote one of you two out," he tells them. "Her alliance is J.T. and that's it." Erinn is still on the fence after hearing Joe's pleas. "Tonight is gonna be a difficult decision. Joe's gunning for Debbie and Debbie's gunning for Joe, so tonight's vote is gonna be interesting. You know, It's kinda like, 'You guys can get rid of each other and then we'll be here when you're done,'" she laughs.

The paranoia reaches an all-time high at camp with Tribal Council just moments away. "I'm about 50% sold that Debbie's going tonight, but I don't know, man," Joe worries. "I'm not buyin' it yet. Debbie's scrambling. She's scrambling with the girls; she's scrambling with everybody." As they grab their torches, Jerry comments to Erinn that Debbie hasn't left him alone all day. "I hope to God my name isn't going up there more than one time," Joe says.

Tribal Council #5 - Timbira Tribe

At Tribal Council, Jeff begins by asking about the vote against Sydney: "I know Joe was shocked," Debbie expresses. "I can understand why; you know, there's a lot of emotions in this game, and if you don't like me because of what happened, that's fine, but to attack somebody's job?! You know, that has nothing to do with this game and yeah, I was a little bit hurt by it." Joe clarifies the comment that he made and although he admits it was said in the heat of the moment, he maintains that Debbie will have to live with the consequences of her vote. Jeff then prods Debbie about her decision: "Why vote for Sydney? What possible benefit is it to you?" Jeff probes. "Old Jalapao's already down in numbers..." Debbie takes a moment to formulate her response: "The hope was, if you take the bottom out of a mountain, the top'll fall down on its own," she cryptically answers.

Survivor: Tocantins Fanfic

"So let me read between the lines then," Jeff says, "You voted out Sydney to weaken Joe?" As Jeff finishes his question, Joe looks towards Debbie with great interest. "Honestly, that's not the only reason, but that's one of the reasons," Debbie responds, to Joe's chagrin. "That's not, like, slimy on my part. You know, this is a game! We're here to play the game and, you know, that's what we're here to do," Debbie stresses. "We'll see who's, uh, still standing in the game after tonight," Joe blurts out to Debbie, trying to provoke her. Not wanting another confrontation, Debbie simply stares ahead and shrugs. Spencer looks on awkwardly.

"Spencer, do you feel this tribe's still staying together or is the conflict starting to have an effect on how this tribe performs?" Jeff asks. "It's been very tense at camp, Jeff," Spencer replies, "But I do feel like we pull together in the challenges because none of us wants to come to Tribal Council. That's the one thing everybody can kindof agree on," he laughs. Erinn disagrees and feels that the tribe isn't coming together enough: "I think we worked better at the challenge today," she chimes in, "But I don't think we're working together near enough." Jeff then asks what the tribe can do to remedy that. "This next challenge, it's a must must win," Joe emphasizes, "And I think that our chances are greater with me in it as opposed to Debbie." Spencer dramatically nods his head to show his agreement with Joe's statement: "I think whatever we do tonight we need to give ourselves the best chance of making it 5-5 at the merge because we don't know, really, what new Jalapao's game plan is or if they're planning on sticking together, so I feel like it would be beneficial to keep the strongest person for the next Immunity Challenge." Spencer then adds that the strongest member is "definitely Joe" in response to a follow-up question.

Jeff then turns the discussion to the vote. Jerry explains that it's a very difficult decision for him because he's the only member of the tribe who gets along with everyone and it's hard to see anyone go. Joe couldn't disagree more. "I mean, at this point, I'm just waiting for you to tell me to go vote," he tells Jeff, as a concerned Debbie widens her eyes. "You know, there's only so much you can say..." With this, the Timbira members cast their votes.

Jeff then tallies the votes, and reveals them one at a time to the castaways:

DEBBIE.

JOE.

DEBBIE.

DEBBIE.

DEBBIE.

In a shocking unanimous decision, Debbie Beebe, the 46 year-old middle school principal from Auburn, Alabama, sees her time in the game come to an end, as Survivor: Tocantins Fanfic

Carolina, Erinn, and Jerry betray her and side with the strength of Spencer and Joe. She becomes the fifth person voted out of Survivor: Tocantins - The Brazilian Highlands.

Debbie's Final Words

Shocked to be betrayed by Erinn, Carolina, and Jerry, a blindsided Debbie leaves behind her final words: "I am absolutely, totally shocked. I mean, I'm not upset; I am absolutely not angry with anybody, but I felt very, very safe tonight so I did not expect it at all. You know, I made the wrong decision trusting who I did, but that's life! I mean, I've got to give them credit, so...I'm not down. I am so proud of myself. I'm gonna continue to live life to the fullest and I'm going to have fun with whatever I do."

Episode 6 - Undisclosed Title

Coming Soon!

Episode 5 Voting History:

5 Votes Against	Survivors Voting Against Debbie

1 Vote Against	Survivor Voting Against Joe
